

The current Indiana laws for regulating telemarketing would be severely handicapped if this FCC proceeding is successful. I have already spent my state tax dollars to produce a positive result. I find it ridiculous that my federal tax dollars may now be spent to undo any part of what Indiana has accomplished. If the FCC creates a national standard for regulating telemarketing, I'm sure it would be beneficial to some states. However, it should be done in such a way as to not override any state standards that may be more restrictive. Again, I must stress, the Indiana system for regulating telemarketing has produced wonderful results for my family and thousands of others. It would be a travesty for the FCC to effectively throw that away.
